The Anglo-Saxons were skilled at crafts. They traded a lot with the Franks, a group of people who lived in western Germany and France. Both the Anglo-Saxons and the Franks were very good at making glass objects, such as beakers, bowls, and jars. Many of these objects have survived for hundreds of years and can still be seen today.

The Anglo-Saxons were a mixture of different tribes who came from north Germany, Denmark, and the northern Netherlands. They sailed across the North Sea and arrived in Britain after the Romans left in 410CE. The tribes included the Angles, Saxons, and Jutes. Some were war-like and pushed the existing Celtic kingdoms back towards the western and northern edges of England and into Wales.
