Students often struggle with choosing a topic for their research paper. Sometimes, the topic is too broad or too narrow. For example, a student might choose a topic like "the history of the world" or "the importance of education." These topics are too broad to fit into a single paper. On the other hand, a student might choose a topic like "the life of a specific person" or "the events of a specific year." These topics are too narrow to provide enough information. A good topic should be specific enough to allow for a detailed analysis, but broad enough to provide enough information to write a paper. Some examples of good topics include "the impact of the Industrial Revolution on society," "the role of women in the American West," and "the effects of the Great Depression on the economy."
